To whom it may concern,

I just wanted to write to you to say how pleased I am with the course and the service I have received from you. This is a great opportunity for me as I am already a qualified spin and fitness instructor and will be going on to do my personal trainer qualification. I am really enjoying taking this course and have learnt a very large amount already. I look forward to studying the upcoming modules provided.

Many Thanks

Hello

I would like to provide verbal feedback:

Amazing course... Not just course content being detailed and covering all areas. But the customer service from the staff has been outstanding. Always an email away, answering everything in detail and never waiting more than 2 days. Finishing the course extremely confident and ready to work in nutrition field more. Very impressed and high recommend.

Thank you so much!!!!!

Good afternoon,

Thank you very much for keeping your word regarding my final test checking date.

As a feedback, regarding the Nutrition course online, I want to mention that the content of the course was very comprehensive and science-based, not to much information,but not too less.
The information was organised in such way that was easy to comprehend,well structured and not difficult to memorise.
With regards to the customer service before and after buying the course, Mr Marwan was very professional and quick in answering my emails.
Overall, I will certainly recommend the Diet Specialist.

My feedback for your website :)

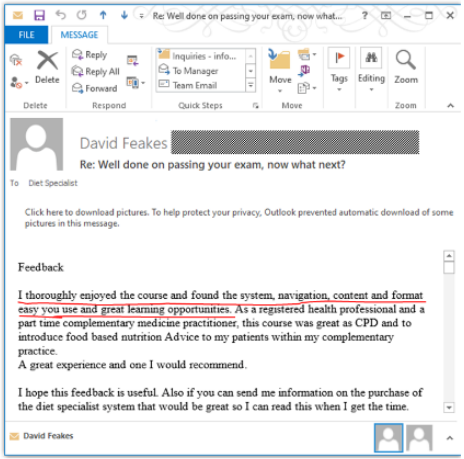

To Marwan Ghannam

I was very pleased to enroll and to pass the Online Nutrition Training Course.
The topics and the amount of information in every module were excellent.
Practice Questions behind all 4 Sections were very useful to test the knowledge.
The Final Exam was very thorough and combined many questions from the course material and also scenario based questions that are important to assess the level of knowledge from the course material. I highly recommend this course as it is a great value for money and well worth doing it.

Kind regards,

Biljana

Feedback

I thoroughly enjoyed the course and found the system, navigation, content and format easy you use and great learning opportunities. As a registered health professional and a part time complementary medicine practitioner, this course was great as CPD and to introduce food based nutrition Advice to my patients within my complementary practice.
A great experience and one I would recommend.

I hope this feedback is useful. Also if you can send me information on the purchase of the diet specialist system that would be great so I can read this when I get the time.

Hi Diet Specialist,

Your website from which the modules were constructed and organised was extremely useful. They were broken down into manageable sections which helped with learning and all categorised under a broader area.

All in all the website was a pleasure to navigate from and to and clearly stated the number of modules in each section. The actual colour scheme I though was appealing and atheistically pleasing and the star system indicated the level of difficult and potentially more time required to spend on that particular module which was a nice feature.

My experience with Diet Specialist...

My experience with Diet Specialist has been great! I decided to do the nutrition diploma purely for my own interest since I personally was interested in not only keeping my lifestyle as healthy as possible but also my patients. Being a GP I found diet and lifestyle is one of the most important factors which we can address to help fight many medical problems.

The online modules were easy to follow and learn from. Thereafter I decided to do more one to one training with a dietician through diet specialist- this I found was most valuable and enabled me to gain deeper knowledge and understanding of how our diet physiologically affects us and how changes can help boost ones metabolism.

I really enjoyed learning with the Diet Specialist team. They were all very approachable and supportive.

A comparative study of the physiological and psychological effects of forest bathing on working age people with and without depressive tendencies

Abstract

Background: In recent years, many of Japanese workers have complained of fatigue and stress, considering them as risk factors for depression. Studies have found that "forest bathing" (Shinrin-yoku) has positive physiological effects, such as blood pressure reduction, improvement of autonomic and immune functions, as well as psychological effects of alleviating depression and improving mental health. In this study, we investigate the physiological and psychological effects of "forest bathing" on people of a working age with and without depressive tendencies.

Methods: We conducted physiological measurements and psychological surveys before and after forest bathing with subjects who participated in day-long sessions of forest bathing, at a forest therapy base located in Hiroshima Prefecture. After excluding severely depressed individuals, the participants were classified into two groups: those with depressive tendencies ($5 \leq K6 \leq 12$) and those without depressive tendencies ($K6 < 5$) for comparative study. The evaluation indices measured were systolic blood pressure (SBP), diastolic blood pressure (DBP), pulse rate (PR), autonomic functions, and profile of mood states (POMS).

Results: Of the 155 participants, 37% had depressive tendencies, without any differences observed between males and females. All participants showed significant decrease in SBP, DBP, and in negative POMS items after a forest bathing session. Before the session, those with depressive tendencies scored significantly higher on the POMS negative items than those without depressive tendencies. After forest bathing, those with depressive tendencies demonstrated significantly greater improvement in many of POMS items than those without depressive tendencies, and many of them no longer differed between those with and without depressive tendencies.

Abstract

Globally, around half (55%) of the population live in fast-paced urban settings where many people find it challenging to manage their stress and respond to crises with a positive mindset. This resulted in prolonged distress where anxiety and fatigue caused physical and mental health concerns. Nature walks involving immersive exposure in the forest, and green spaces have been posited to offer physiological and psychological benefits. Therefore, in this systematic review, we evaluated the effects of forest bathing on psychological and physiological outcomes. We searched four English and five non-English databases (Chinese and Korean) for peer-reviewed studies published between January 2000 and March 2021. This review adhered to the recommendations of the Preferred Reporting Items for Systematic Reviews and Meta-analysis Statement 2020. The primary outcomes explored in this review were mainly psychological, including anxiety, depression, mood and quality of life. The secondary outcomes were physiological outcomes such as blood pressure and heart rate. We conducted a meta-analysis on each outcome using the random-effects model. Heterogeneity was assessed by the $I^2$ statistic. Thirty-six articles (21 in English, 3 in Chinese and 12 in Korean) with 3554 participants were included in this review. Our meta-analysis suggested that forest bathing can significantly reduce symptoms of depression and anxiety. However, we did not observe as many benefits in physiological outcomes. Against the background of the negative effects of urbanization on mental well-being, this review highlighted the potential therapeutic role of forests in the contemporary world, lending further evidence-based support for forest conservation.
